The Yankees win the pennant.

Also, Mr. Hughes, while in Estes Park buy a couple of photographs from Enos Mills or Fred Clatsworthy. One of, say, Long's Peak, and one of the trail to Gem Lake or Fern Lake. Hang them up when you get home, and look at them the morning-or, better, each morning-after election. If you are defeated, you can look at the pictures with the realization that nothing matters a great deal; if you are elected, you can gaze at them with the knowledge that nobody matters terribly.

Our Candidate, as everybody knows, has been touring the West, and crowds have been coming thousands of miles to hear him. "Speaks at Reno," runs a Boston Traveler headline, "Where He Is Welcomed by Crowds of Nebraskans."

FAMILIAR MISQUOTATIONS.

"Praise from Sir Hubert."

"Poetry and painting," dogmatizes Old Ed Howe, "have disappeared as real forces." Still, Ed used to have the same contempt for music, until one evening, not more than five years ago, when he happened to hear a good orchestra. And he apologized, saying he'd been all wrong. So, some day, he may admit that a few poems have had real force and that three or four paintings are just as motive as the success of Mr. Morgan or Mr. Rockefeller, for which Old Ed has tremendous respect.
